Early Life and Rise to Stardom

Victor George Mature was born on August 11, 1913, in San Diego, California. The youngest of three children in a modest household, he grew up in a world of hardship and determination. After his father's early death, the family moved to Los Angeles, where the young Mature found his calling in the performing arts. He studied at the University of California, Los Angeles (UCLA) before enrolling in the Pasadena Playhouse, honing his craft on stage before making the leap to Hollywood.

His breakthrough came in the early 1940s when he signed a contract with Paramount Pictures. He was married twice, and his relationships were the subject of much gossip during his career. Understanding his personal life is essential to answering the central question about his potential offspring.

Marriage to Lorna Gray (Lorna Grey)

In the early 1940s, Mature married fellow actor Lorna Gray, a popular actress known for her work in B-movies and serials. The couple's wedding was a quiet affair, and they remained married until 1946. Despite their shared profession and mutual support, there is no documented evidence of children from this union. Public records and biographies consistently note that the pair had no children together.

Marriage to Julie Adams

After his divorce from Gray, Mature entered a second marriage in 1947 with actress Julie Adams, best known for her role in Creature from the Black Lagoon. The couple's marriage lasted until 1952. Like their first marriage, the couple did not have any children. Their divorce was amicable, and both went on to pursue separate careers in Hollywood.

Other Relationships and Family Connections

Beyond his two marriages, Mature was rumored to have had affairs with various actresses, but none of these relationships led to a family. He was known to be a private individual, and he rarely spoke about his personal life in interviews.
